

The Essential Seller's Guide

6 Things To Consider
When Getting A Valuation
On Your Property

The essential guide on things to remember when getting your property valued

DOUGLAS NEWMAN GOOD DNG

GALVIN

Marketing your property at the right price is imperative at achieving a sale in the right time frame.

Under valuing your property is an obvious mistake and will see you letting go of an asset without adequate compensation.

However over valuing your property will result in your property being on the market for a long period of time, and stagnating and delaying your plans.

1

Research

Do research into properties in your area that have recently been bought or sold to get an idea of how much you could expect to sell your property for.

Check property portals or the property price register.

2

Professional Valuations

Invite an agent to value your property. You may want to invite more than one agent to value your property.

3

Choose an agent

Don't simply choose an agency to list your property who have given you the highest valuation. Ensure that you read reviews, ensure they are registered, have sufficient experience and good marketing to showcase your home.

4

Why is the right price so important?

An over priced property will not only deter buyers, but it will even deter people from viewing your home if they feel that the price is out of their budget, or if they feel they will be paying more than what the property is worth. You won't even get the opportunity to win them over.

On top of that, you will have to reduce the price of your property at a later stage which gives buyers a lot of leverage to put in even lower offers at a later stage.

Your property might also take a long time to sell, which delays your plans and racks up unnecessary fees.

5

Buyer's Lender Checks

If you do receive an offer, the lender who will be offering a mortgage will want to evaluate the home too to make sure it is priced accurately. If they deem the property to be overpriced, they might not award the mortgage to the buyer and your sale will fall through.

6

Remove Emotion

Your agent will make an objective valuation based on the current property, its features, amenities and current condition. Try not to be too emotionally invested in the number and the financial investments and sacrifices you have made over time. If you feel the valuation is too low, get another opinion.

Contact us

023 8844958 | info@mgalvin.ie

www.dnngalvin.ie

